

Authors

Walter Feichtinger, Brigadier General – Austrian Armed Forces, Mag. Dr., since 2002 Head of the Institute for Peace Support and Conflict Management (IFK) of the Austrian National Defence Academy in Vienna. Officer training at the Theresian Military Academy in Wr. Neustadt/Austria, field officer at the armoured corps, final position commander of the 10th Tank Battalion. Studied political science and journalism, 2002 doctoral graduation Dr. phil.; from 2001 until 2002 security and defence political counselor at the Federal Chancellery, member of the Board of the European Forum Alpbach, advisor to the Austrian security research program KIRAS, member of the advisory council and lector at the Danube - University Krems and co-founder of the International Society of Military Sciences. Numerous publications, lectures and media appearances on the topics of national and international security policy, international crisis management, editor of the series IFK-Aktuell and Internationale Sicherheit und Konfliktmanagement (Böhlau-Verlag, Vienna) as well as co-editor of Sicherheit und Frieden (Nomos-Verlag).

Maria Raquel Freire is researcher at the Centre for Social Studies and tenured professor in International Relations at the School of Economics of the University of Coimbra. She received her PhD in International Relations from the University of Kent, United Kingdom, in 2002. She coordinates the International Relations Group, School of Economics of the University of Coimbra; the International Relations Undergraduate Programme, School of Economics of the University of Coimbra; and is co-coordinator of the PhD Programme in International Politics and Conflict Resolution, at the University of Coimbra. She is a member of the Board of Directors of the Portuguese Political Science Association, and Chaired COST Action IS0805: “New Challenges of Peacekeeping and the European Union’s Role in Multilateral Crisis Management”. Her research interests focus on peace studies, particularly peacekeeping and peacebuilding; foreign policy; international security; and Russia and the post-Soviet space. She has published several chapters and papers in refereed journals dealing with these topics, including International Peacekeeping, International Politics, Asian Perspective, Global Society, Journal of Conflict, Security and Development, among other.

Maria Grazia Galantino is currently lecturer at the Department of Social Science and Economics of Sapienza, University of Rome, where she teaches Sociology of conflicts and peace processes, and senior researcher at the Institute for International Research, Archivio Disarmo, Rome. She earned an International MA in Politics in Europe at University of Siena and her PhD in Sociology and Policy Analysis at Sapienza, University of Rome, in 2004, with a dissertation on the role of public opinion in policymaking during military interventions. She has taught in graduate and post-graduate programs at various universities as well as in training courses for political representatives and public officials. She is also a lecturer at the Italian Institute of High Studies for Defence. Her research interests cover international security, conflict resolution, civil-military relations, military sociology, media and public opinion, citizens' participation, and internal security issues. She participated in several research programmes at national and international level for academic, public and private institutions. Currently, she is working on projects related to Italian foreign policy, new challenges for the international system and the role of military and police forces in internal security. Maria Grazia Galantino has published papers and chapters on security issues, public opinion and peacekeeping.